With the new flag weight metric you are encouraged to flag more stuff, which makes sense. However, some things are not flagged very often, but are important and deserve an answer. How can I write better flag messages that will be more likely to be understood by moderators? A: There are no shortage of things for you to flag. There are plenty of (usually) helpful flags for you to find. If you're flagging correctly, you should be flagging to moderator attention in the main review queue. It's the appropriate place for these. If you get a lot of flags, you can head over to the "flagging" tab on your user profile. You'll get a lot of advice there. If you don't have enough reputation to access the review queues, then head over to your profile and click the "reputation" tab, and see if you can gain some reputation to access the review queues. You can gain a lot of reputation in a short amount of time, and do a lot of work. More reputation = more access to review queues. If you're flagging things to moderator attention incorrectly, do not read the fine print of your flag. The guidelines here on Meta.SE indicate what you should be flagging and what not to be very clearly. Make sure you're flagging the correct thing to be done in the first place. Your specific case would involve VLQ flags. Featured post 6th May 2016 It's the perfect time of year for a chic shopping trip to Galleries Lafayette in Paris. This historic Parisian store has been around since 1844 and... Links I Love Last weekend we went for a proper day trip to Brighton, the day before I was due to start my new job. It was my first time there, so I wanted to go see everything! On the Sunday we went to the seaside and walked along the beach, ate a lot of fish and chips (yum) and then I watched Madam President, a documentary about Margaret Thatcher. After this, we were really hungry so we went to check out the beach café's in the area. 82157476af
